

Strengthen the exchange of information framework in the field of taxation

Fields marked with * are mandatory.

Introduction

Having an economy that works for people, while making Europe greener and more digital, are clear political priorities for this Commission. In terms of Union tax policy, this translates into fair taxation where everybody pays their fair share, as stressed by President von der Leyen in the political guidelines for the European Commission. This Commission is committed to step up the fight against tax avoidance, fraud and evasion, while improving the business taxation environment in the single market.

The Directive on Administrative Cooperation in Direct Taxation establishes a common approach for the mutual assistance and exchange of information in the field of direct taxation. The Directive supports the Member States by providing tax authorities a legal framework for cooperation, as well as procedures for the safe and secure exchange of information. Since its adoption in 2011, the Directive has been expanded five times, to encompass additional types of income and information. This continuous update in accordance with new challenges as they arise has enabled the directive to maintain its relevance and effectiveness.

This public consultation is the first step to prepare a potential initiative which the Commission is considering in the context of further improving cooperation between tax authorities of the Member States. In addition to addressing some identified shortcomings to existing elements of the Directive on Administrative Cooperation in Direct Taxation, this initiative should provide tax administrations with information on taxpayers who generate income (revenues) through digital platforms.

For the purposes of this consultation, the expression “digital platform” is to be interpreted as encompassing a wide range of activities whereby digital platforms facilitate transactions between individuals and/or entities. This includes for example rental or transportation services. This aims at ensuring the adequate taxation of such revenues while streamlining and updating exchange of information more generally. It builds upon the recently completed evaluation of the Directive. It also will ensure consistency with ongoing work at EU and international level on taxation of the digital platform economy.

2 About the consultation

In line with Better Regulation principles, the Commission has decided to launch an open public consultation designed to gather stakeholders’ views on the possible enhancements to the EU administrative cooperation in the field of taxation. This consultation document contains two separate sections. You can choose to answer only one or both of the sections, depending on your interest and knowledge.

Responding to the full questionnaire should take about 15 minutes. The questionnaire is available in English only.

Some questions are hidden. This means they will only appear if you chose a certain answer previously. So do not worry if the numbering seems to indicate a missing question.

The first section aims to capture views from all stakeholders on the provision of services through digital platforms, that currently fall outside the scope of the EU legislation on administrative cooperation. In that first section, stakeholders' responses will help the Commission determine whether an EU legislative initiative to target income obtained through digital platforms is needed. The replies will also help identify the main risks as perceived by stakeholders, as well as the priorities for policy actions.

The second section will seek views of stakeholders on the strengthening of the EU framework on administrative cooperation, in particular as regards joint tax audits.

Important notice

Contributions received are intended for publication "as submitted" on the Commission's websites. In the next section, you have the possibility to indicate whether you agree to the publication of your individual responses under your name or anonymously. In addition to answering the questions, you may upload a brief document (e.g. a position paper) at the end of the questionnaire. The document can be in any official EU language.

4 Digital platforms

The phenomenon of digital platforms facilitating peer-to-peer sale of goods or services between users – including the “collaborative economy” or so-called “sharing” and “gig” economy – is growing rapidly.

Many different services can be accessed through digital platforms. Some examples include:

- accommodation services (such as renting an apartment when going on holidays);
- transportation services (such as car sharing);
- food-related services (such as home delivery);
- household services (such as gardening or babysitting);
- professional services (such as accounting or legal services);
- collaborative finance services (such as crowd-funding).

While the emergence of these digital platforms can have strong positive effects on the economy, they also raise a number of issues, including making sure that participants selling goods or services via those platforms (platform sellers) are aware of and fully comply with their tax obligations.

Given the nature of these platforms – highly mobile, operating internationally and often with no real physical presence - it can be challenging for tax administrations to gain timely access or even detect relevant information on transactions carried out or income obtained through digital platforms. These developments present risks of distorting competition with traditional businesses and leading to taxable income not being reported, and having the potential of becoming a vehicle for the shadow economy.

There are concerns that some income obtained by platform sellers is not declared to the relevant tax authorities. A number of EU countries (e.g. Italy, France, Denmark or Estonia) have already introduced unilateral reporting measures requiring platforms to communicate to the tax authorities revenues received by platform sellers, while others are planning to introduce similar measures in the near future. However, it is also recognised that unilateral measures are inefficient, as enforcement of the rules proves difficult - if not impossible - in a flexible and remotely operated business model. Additionally, each (unilateral) approach may include different registration and compliance requirements. This may lead to different regulatory models between EU countries and Single Market fragmentation, with an inherent administrative burden for both platforms and users.

4.9 Several EU countries have already imposed (or are planning to impose) reporting obligations on digital platforms. Do you consider that this national approach will bring undue administrative burden to platforms and/or sellers due to the differences between countries?

- Yes, to both platforms and sellers
- Yes, but only to platforms
- Yes, but only to sellers
- No, to neither the platforms nor the sellers
- Don't know

4.10 Please explain your reasoning

4.11 Do you consider that this new way of doing business through an digital platform – whether providing a service or selling goods – should be subject to reporting by the platforms to the relevant tax administration?

For example in order to ensure a level playing field with traditional service providers

- Yes
- No
- Don't know

4.12 Do you consider that digital platforms should have the same reporting obligations for tax purposes throughout the EU (i.e. single set of rules)?

- Yes
- No
- Don't know

4.13 Do you consider that common reporting obligations in the EU would reduce the administrative burden for platforms and /or sellers?

- Yes, for both platforms and sellers
- Yes, but only for platforms
- Yes, but only for sellers
- No, this would not reduce the administrative burden
- Don't know

4.14 If common EU rules were adopted, should all digital platforms be subject to reporting obligations or do you consider that some should benefit from an exemption (for example start-ups, platforms with low revenues, etc.)?

- All platforms should be subject to the same reporting obligations (to avoid potential loopholes)
- Some platforms should benefit from an exemption (for example start-ups, platforms with low revenues, etc.)
- Don't know

4.16 If common EU rules were adopted, should all providers of services or sellers of goods through digital platforms be reported to the relevant tax administrations or do you consider that some should benefit from an exemption?

- All providers of services or seller of goods should be subject to the same reporting obligations (to avoid potential loopholes)
- Some providers of services or sellers of goods should benefit from an exemption.
- Don't know

5 Joint tax audits

Business increasingly operate on a global basis and engage in cross-border activities while the competences of tax administrations remain largely limited to the national territory as a matter of principle.

Tax administrations need to engage in closer co-operation in order to ensure that taxpayers pay the right amount of taxes while, at the same time, they need to enhance tax certainty and prevent double taxation.

Contrasting the continued globalisation of the economy including its rapid digitalisation with the territorial limitations faced by tax administrations clearly suggests that the mere exchange of information may not be sufficient or the most efficient and effective route for achieving the best compliance outcomes for administrations and taxpayers.

Similarly, acting and auditing unilaterally rather than jointly in areas such as transfer pricing, not only risks missing part of the picture but also carries the risk of double taxation for taxpayers. This may then lead to disputes, which may require an additional time-consuming process through mutual agreement procedures with an uncertain outcome.

The next step towards a more enhanced co-operation between tax administrations could be to conduct joint audits, whereby two or more administrations form a single audit team in order to examine an issue/set of transactions that pertain to one or more related taxpayers (with cross-border economic activities). The aim would be to agree on a single audit report at the end and assess the related taxpayers to tax on this basis. Through this process, the tax authorities would be expected to form a more comprehensive understanding of the audited taxpayers' affairs and conclude with an assessment that does not result in double taxation or non-taxation.

Joint audits can play an important role in contributing to a better functioning of the internal market on two fronts: (i) they offer tax administrations a transparent and efficient tool to facilitate the allocation of taxing rights; (ii) they may prevent the occurrence of double taxation to the benefit of the taxpayers.

Within the EU framework, the Directive on Administrative Cooperation in Direct Taxation (Directive 2011/16 /EU) refers to different forms of administrative cooperation but does not explicitly foresee joint audits. In the current practice, some tax administrations already perform multilateral controls in a way that the procedure and outcome are, in essence, close to the concept of a joint audit. They thus combine the elements of a simultaneous tax inspection (art. 12) with features of presence of tax officials abroad (art. 11).

While such joint audits may already be performed by combining existing legal instruments, certain challenges remain as identified in the evaluation of the Directive, especially in non-cooperative situations. The current legal framework could be improved.

5.1 Do you consider that there is a need to revise the EU legal framework to include some more specific details on joint audits?

- Yes
- No
- Don't know

5.2 Do you consider that each joint audit should finish with a single agreed report?

- Yes
- No
- Don't know

5.3 Do you consider that the tax administrations participating in the joint audits should be obliged to reach agreement on a report (i.e. facts and legal interpretation of facts)?

- Yes
- No
- Don't know

5.4 Do you consider that the result of a joint audit should be taken into account if the taxpayer applies for ex ante certainty by way of an Advanced Pricing Arrangement (APA) or requests a Mutual Agreement Procedure (MAP) for solving a dispute that has already arisen?

- Yes
- No
- Don't know

5.5 Do you consider that tax administrations should be obliged to participate in a joint audit when they receive a request to this end from one or more other tax administrations?

- Yes
- No
- Don't know

5.6 Do you consider that the taxpayer should be granted the right to request a joint audit?

- Yes
- No
- Don't know
